A Lovely Surprise

Peter had a lovely toy railway. He kept it set out on the table. He had a station and a tunnel, as well as lines and trains.

“I wish I had a signal,” said Peter. “I haven’t got one. There’s a beauty in the toy shop. I shall save up all my money and buy it.”

He saved up all his pennies, and a sixpence that Grandma gave him. At last he had enough! He emptied all the money out of his box and counted it.

Just as he was going out to buy the signal, Mother called him. “Peter! Poor Betty has fallen down and has hurt her head. She is in bed. Call on her, will you?”

Peter said he would. He went off to the toy shop- and dear me, when he got there, he saw a doll- just the kind that Betty liked.

So he bought the doll instead of the signal he wanted. Wasn’t it kind of him? He went from the toy shop with the doll to Betty’s house. He would give the doll to Betty.

Betty was so pleased! She hugged the doll in delight. And then what a surprise! She held out a signal to Peter. “Take this, Peter!” she said. “I don’t want it. You see, I don’t have a railway set but you do. You use it!”

And now you should see how well that signal works when Peter plays with his trains!
